Governor's New Proposal Addresses Both Affordable Housing and Office Space Vacancies.

BY ZACHARY NATHANSON

On January 31, 2023, Governor Kathy Hochul took some steps to address the void in affordable housing in New York City. In addition to the proposed extension to the Affordable Housing New York program ("421-a(16)"), and a far more restrictive replacement to the "J-51" program, the Governor also introduced a brand new proposed tax incentive for commercial conversions in New York City.

The proposed Real Property Tax Law section 467-m, referred to as Affordable Housing from Commercial Conversions ("AHCC"), was created to address the dearth of affordable housing in New York City amidst a glut of vacant office space following the COVID-19 pandemic. It has potential.

Eligibility

AHCC would provide an exemption from some real property taxes, other than for local improvements, for a three (3) year construction period, as defined hereinafter, and thereafter for nineteen (19) years (the "Restriction Period"). AHCC benefits are more substantial in properties located south of 96th Street in Manhattan than they are elsewhere in the City. There are no geographic limitations set forth in the proposal. There are prevailing wage requirements for building service employees for the entire Restriction Period, even if the benefit is terminated.

AHCC is only available to properties converting from commercial to rental residential uses, and must contain at least six (6) units. Properties cannot convert to a hotel, for transient use, as a cooperative or condominium, or if the property is receiving other real property tax exemptions or abatements.

Under the proposal, projects must commence (when construction "lawfully began in good faith") between December 31, 2022 and December 31, 2032. Completion of construction (defined as the issuance date of a Temporary or Final Certificate of Occupancy covering all residential space) must occur on or before December 31, 2038.

The Benefit

During the construction period – the period between commencement and completion, exclusive of any construction that occurs prior to three (3) years from the completion date – all AHCC properties would receive a 100% exemption from real property taxes, except for those regarding local improvements.

For the 19-year Restriction Period, benefits would depend on the location of the AHCC property. For properties in Manhattan south of 96th Street, the proposed benefit would exempt 50% of real property taxes, not including local improvements, for the first 15 years, and would phase out 10% per year thereafter. Outside of that area in Manhattan, projects would be granted a 35% exemption of real property taxes, not including local improvements, for 15 years, and would phase out 7% per year thereafter.

Affordability Requirements

Under AHCC, the converted property must include at least twenty percent (20%) affordable units, in three or fewer income bands. "Income Bands," for the purposes of the proposal, is defined as the percentage of Area Median Income ("AMI") adjusted for family size that is a multiple of 10%.

Additionally, at least five percent (5%) of the total units must be at or below 40% AMI. The weighted average of all income bands must not exceed 70% AMI, and no income band may exceed 100% AMI.

Much like 421-a (16), AHCC properties must include a unit mix that either provides for proportional affordable and market rate units, or provides affordable units of which at least 50% would be two bedrooms, and not more than 25% would be one bedrooms and studios. Additionally, affordable units cannot be restricted to a specific floor or area. Finally, affordable units cannot be rented to a corporation or other entity, and cannot be left off the market for an unreasonable amount of time. HPD may also promulgate rules that affect marketing, monitoring and marketing bands.

All affordable units must remain subject to rent stabilization through the Restriction Period and until such tenant vacates, even if the AHCC is denied or terminated. The rent registration must designate units as "AHCC Program Affordable Housing Units." Market rate units are not subject to rent stabilization, except to the extent they would otherwise be subject to stabilization requirements.

The proposal does not include much in the way of detail regarding the applications or other filings that would need to be submitted. Under the AHCC, HPD would promulgate application requirements. The proposal does include a filing fee of $3,000 per unit, a portion of which would be paid at submission. This filing fee would not apply to projects with substantial government assistance.

Conclusion

AHCC does not provide the same sizable benefit that 421-a(16) provided to new residential developments. However, it does address a need. The absence of a program which provides affordable housing, like 421-a(16), risks exacerbating already sky-high rents and crushing an avenue for construction of new affordable rental units. Meanwhile, the new reality of remote work has resulted in a steady rate of office vacancies. AHCC seems like a natural solution to both problems.

Dramatic Changes to Notarization Law

BY JOSHUA A. SYCOFF

On January 25, 2023, the New York State Department of State adopted substantial changes to Title 19 of the New York Codes, Rules and Regulations that will significantly alter the notarization process. Most notable among these changes are: (i) heightened notarial record keeping requirements (19 NYCRR 182.9); (ii) the elimination of Remote Ink Notarization ("RIN") and (iii) the addition of a new law effective January 31, 2023, authorizing notaries to perform electronic notarial acts via audio visual means paired with electronic signature software, labeled Remote Online Notarization ("RON") (Executive Law Section 135-c). The new Title 19 laws on notarial acts can be found here.

Record Keeping Requirements for In-Person Notarization:

All New York State notaries performing in-person notary services are now required to abide by strict record keeping requirements; the rules for RON are different and more cumbersome.

All notaries performing in-person notary services must now keep a journal record of certain information from each notarial act; the journal record must be maintained for ten years. The journal record must contain: (i) the date, approximate time, and type of notarial acts performed; (ii) the name and address of any individuals for whom a notarial act was performed; (iii) the number and type of notarial services provided; (iv) the type of credentials used to identify the principal, including, for verification made where a notary relies on the oath or affirmation of two witnesses who identify themselves with a valid government issued ID and who know the document signer personally, the names of the witnesses and, if applicable, the type of credential used; and (v) the verification procedures used for any personal appearance before the notary public. These journal record keeping requirements mark a significant deviation from how most New York notaries have practiced for years. Furthermore, these new requirements are somewhat ambiguous. Finally, existing notaries are not being required to pass any sort of test or re-certification related to these new rules.

One apparent ambiguity is that of section (v), which requires that the notary document the "verification procedures" used for any personal appearance before the notary. However, it is unclear what constitutes a "verification procedure" since the term is not defined. Section 182.5 provides some guidance: "For any individual who physically appears before a notary public, satisfactory evidence of identity requires identity verification through: (1) presentation of the back and front of an identification card issued by a governmental agency, provided the card: (i) is valid and current; (ii) contains the photographic image of the bearer; (iii) has an accurate physical description of the bearer, if applicable; and (iv) includes the signature of the bearer." In addition, while seemingly not required, best practice for notaries moving forward would be to keep a copy of the identification card.

Elimination of Remote Ink Notarization ("RIN"):

Throughout the Covid-19 pandemic, many notaries relied on what was commonly referred to as Remote Ink Notarization ("RIN"). RIN allowed notaries to notarize a signer's wet ink signature via some sort of audio visual means whereby the notary would verify the identity of the signer, the signer would sign in wet ink from his/her remote location, and the signer would then transmit the signature to the notary, who would notarize in New York. On January 31, 2023, the temporary statute allowing for RIN was repealed and replaced with the new Executive Law §135-c, Electronic Notarization. Therefore, this type of notarization is no longer permitted.

Remote Online Notarization ("RON"):

The biggest change to the New York notary laws is the new ability of New York notaries (located in New York) to notarize electronic signatures (i.e., signatures similar to docusign) when the signer is located anywhere in the world (as long as the notarized document has to do with a matter before a United States court or involves property in the United States). Additionally, notaries performing such electronic notarizations can now charge a fee of up to $25 per notarial act performed (even if there are multiple notarization acts within a single session).

Notably, the new electronic notarial act law requires existing notaries to re-register with the state (and pay the applicable $60 registration fee). Notaries are not permitted to perform RON without registering through the Department of State and following the proper registration procedures and submitting (via the notary's New York business express account) a sample version of an electronically notarized document using a digital signature and certificate (presumably supplied and generated by the notary's statutorily-compliant software of choice).

The new electronic notarial act law is likely to dramatically affect the efficiency of transactions and litigation in New York, but not before law firms, title companies, lenders and others figure out a way to properly comply with the regulations. To utilize RON, notaries are required to use software from providers that "meets NYS requirements". However, at the time of this writing, New York has not yet recommend any providers, and offers no guidance other than advising notaries to ask providers whether their software complies with the new requirements. To make matters worse, notarization misconduct carries civil liability for injured parties, exposing notaries, many of whom are attorneys, to significant risk for not properly complying with the laws. Although RON is now technically in effect, it will likely take some time before it becomes widely used by notaries.

Where Does New York City Commercial Real Estate Stand Three Years After the COVID-19 Pandemic?

BY LEWIS A. LINDENBERG

The real estate industry in New York City is embracing a "new normal" since the COVID-19 pandemic changed the landscape of the real estate market three years ago.

At the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic, former Governor Andrew M. Cuomo issued a series of emergency executive orders, two of which provided for: (1) employees of non-essential businesses to begin to work remotely, and (2) a moratorium against owners bringing lawful Court eviction proceedings. (The orders did not waive or abate rent owed by tenants.) The consequence of the moratorium was that owners could not seek evictions of tenants for failure to pay rent.

The longstanding effects of the executive orders were, at least at that time, uncertain. Many commercial owners sought to assist their commercial tenants by providing either deferred repayment of rent arrears or voluntarily abating a portion of the rent arrears. Additionally, the Federal government provided emergency financial relief funds (the Paycheck Protection Program) for businesses, which effectively afforded cash infusions to tenants to remain in business during the pandemic.

Notwithstanding such financial relief, many tenants took the position that they were not required to pay rent during--and even after--the period covered by the emergency orders. This resulted in tenants asserting a myriad of defenses, including the doctrines of force majeure, frustration of purpose, and impossibility of performance– defenses not regularly asserted in almost 100 years.

With a few exceptions, Courts generally rejected the application of these defenses to waive or abate tenants' rental obligations.

The law is clear that the doctrines of frustration of purpose and impossibility of performance will not replace the unambiguous language of commercial leases requiring tenants to pay rent even if a force majeure event were to occur, as evidenced by the following holdings in recent Court decisions:

> "[T] hese doctrines are not implicated by temporary governmental restrictions on in-person operations, as the parties' respective duties were to pay rent in exchange for occupying the leased premises and plaintiff acknowledged that it was open for curbside retail services as of June 4, 2020 and services by appointment as of June 22, 2020." Valentino U.S. A., Inc. v. 693 Fifth Owner LLC, 203 A.D. 3d 480 (1st Dep't 2022);
>
> "The doctrine of frustration of purpose does not apply as a matter of law where the tenant was not 'completely deprived of the benefit of its bargain.' " The Gap, Inc. v 170 Broadway Retail Owners, LLC, 195 A. D. 3d 575 (1st Dep't 2021);
> "Contrary to defendant's argument, (the frustration of purpose) doctrine has no applicability here. This is not a case where the retail space defendant leased no longer exists, nor is it even prohibited from selling its product. Instead, defendant's business model of attracting street traffic is no longer profitable because there are dramatically fewer people walking around due to the Pandemic." 35 East 75th Street Corp. v. Christian Louboutin, 2020 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 10423 at *5 (Sup Ct. N.Y. Co. Dec 9, 2020);

Where do we stand today? The moratorium prohibiting eviction proceedings has been lifted and summary proceeding in the Civil Court are currently ongoing. The process is slower than before the pandemic and, hopefully, things will begin to move more quickly. The Supreme Court continues to remain an option to seek rent as monetary damages against tenants and guarantors.

Notwithstanding, owners legal rights to pursue unpaid rent in Court remain strong—tenant retention is, in itself, a very important business consideration because of uncertain market conditions, including the reality of a remote workforce and a shift in consumer behavior.

In my discussions with owners of commercial office space, and professionals, there are a host of factors contributing to market conditions which will impact on trends for the foreseeable future.

Many businesses have closed their doors permanently and finding replacement tenants remains a challenge. Moreover, tenants who are still leasing demand smaller spaces with more flexible lease terms, at a lower dollar figure per square foot and more construction concessions. Owners are meeting certain challenges on renting office space by attempting to add amenities to their buildings to try to differentiate themselves from the competition. Generally, owners have to be innovative in order to be competitive in the current market.

Suffice it to say that the pandemic has brought tremendous challenges to office and retail leasing. But New York City has endured many severe past challenges, and the fundamentals of what the City has to offer as the financial capital of the world are second to none, and will afford opportunities for the leasing environment to correct itself and come out stronger at the end.

CASE DECISION BULLETIN

Court of Appeals Rules in J-51 Deregulation Case: No Default Formula in Casey v. Whitehouse Estates

BY: MAGDA L. CRUZ

In a much anticipated case involving how to calculate legal rents following an improper deregulation while a building was receiving J-51 tax benefits, the Court of Appeals in Casey v. Whitehouse Estates, filed March 16, 2023, unanimously rejected the application of a punitive default formula for resetting the rents, and reaffirmed its prior holding in Matter of Regina Metro Co., LLC v. NYS Div. of Hous. and Comm. Renewal, 35 N.Y.3d 332 (2020), on these issues.

In Casey, while receiving J-51 tax benefits, apartments were deregulated through 2011 when they became vacant and their rents exceeded the then statutory threshold. The deregulation occurred both before and after the 2009 Roberts v. Tishman Speyer Props., L.P. decision, which had held that deregulation could not legally occur during a J-51 period — contrary to 15 years of administrative and judicial rulings that had formerly allowed such deregulation. The tenant-plaintiffs commenced a rent overcharge class action in 2011. Their individual tenancies commenced between 2002 and 2011. The owner's attempt to issue refunds and register rents it believed were lawfully recalculated after the class action was commenced was deemed to constitute a "fraudulent scheme" by the lower Courts.

The Court of Appeals has now reversed and pointedly explained why, as follows:

> [Owner]'s deregulation of the apartments was based on this same "misinterpretation of the law" involved in Regina and therefore that conduct did not constitute fraud. [Owner]'s subsequent re-registering of the apartments occurred after the four-year lookback period and [tenants] have failed to offer evidence that it somehow affected the reliability of the actual rent [tenants] paid on the base date.

The Court of Appeals made clear that an actual fraudulent scheme to deregulate needed to be proven before resorting to a punitive default formula to recalculate the rents, and the tenants failed to prove any fraudulent conduct. Once again, the Court of Appeals stated that a fraudulent scheme to deregulate requires a finding of willfulness – and that a misinterpretation of deregulation law is not willful conduct. Without establishing the elements of fraud, as defined in Regina, the Court of Appeals reiterated that the proper way to determine the legal rent and any overcharges:

> For purposes of calculating overcharges, where it is possible to determine the rent "actually charged on the base date" – here October 14, 2007 – that amount should be used and rent increases legally available to [owner] pursuant to the RSL during the four-year period should be added.

Significantly, the Court of Appeals reinforced "the limited category of cases" where rental history can be examined beyond the applicable rent overcharge statute of limitations.

This holding, in combination with Regina, sends a strong message from the State's highest court that liability for rent overcharges is not limitless. The examination of rent histories beyond the applicable statute of limitations and the punitive default formula may be employed only in the rare case where an actual fraudulent scheme to deregulate is found, a heavy burden of proof for tenants.

Maximizing Your Leverage as a Buyer: How Equitable Vendee's Lien and Notice of Pendency Protect Real Estate Purchasers

BY ISRAEL A. KATZ

An equitable vendee's lien is an often-underutilized and little-known common law doctrine that offers significant protection to purchasers of real property in New York. It arises when a buyer purchases property from a seller, but the seller fails to convey clear title to the property or otherwise breaches a material provision of the purchase agreement, which entitles the purchaser to terminate or rescind the agreement and demand the return of its contract deposit. The equitable vendee's lien is a legal remedy that allows the purchaser to assert a claim against the real property being conveyed up to the amount of its contract deposit in order to secure the re-payment of the contract deposit from the seller.

The real value and power of this equitable doctrine is that it affords the purchaser the ability to file a notice of pendency against the property in dispute. A notice of pendency may only be filed if the relief sought in the complaint would affect title or possession to real property. This is why the equitable lien doctrine is such a game changer: The doctrine converts the purchaser's claim from one of money damages only (i.e., the return of its contract deposit) into one seeking to foreclose a lien on real property, which thus permits the purchaser to file a notice of pendency against the real property. The novelty of this doctrine is that it applies even if the purchaser takes a seemingly contradictory position seeking rescission or termination of the contract.

In fact, CPLR 3002(f) makes explicit that a vendee's lien arises even where a purchaser asserts such a contradictory claim of rescission or termination of the contract:

> Vendee's lien not to depend upon form of action. When relief is sought, in an action or by way of defense or counterclaim, by a vendee under an agreement for the sale or exchange of real property, because of the rescission, failure, invalidity or disaffirmance of such agreement, a vendee's lien upon the property shall not be denied merely because the claim is for rescission, or is based upon the rescission, failure, invalidity or disaffirmance of such agreement

The filing of the notice pendency offers the purchaser significant advantage in negotiations with the seller, as it effectively prevents the seller from selling, transferring or mortgaging the property to anyone else without first satisfying the purchaser's lien. Faced with those issues, the seller will often be eager to resolve the issue and remove the notice of pendency in order to clear the way for a sale to a third party, or to refinance or obtain new mortgage loans.

Purchasers of cooperative apartments are the exception to this rule. New York courts have consistently held that a notice of pendency may not be filed in connection with a dispute concerning the conveyance of a co-op apartment, because the conveyance of a co-op apartment is not a conveyance of real property. Rather, it is the sale of a proprietary lease for a particular apartment in the building coupled with an ownership interest in the shares of the cooperative that are allocated to the apartment. Because there is no conveyance of real property, no equitable lien arises and no notice of pendency may be placed on the apartment, co-op building or co-op shares while the contract dispute is being litigated.

In sum, an equitable vendee's lien is a valuable and powerful legal tool that allows buyers of real property in New York to protect their investment and secure repayment of their contract deposits. By seeking the imposition of, and foreclosure on, such a lien and filing a notice of pendency, the buyer can effectively prevent the seller from selling or transferring the property to anyone else, or mortgaging the property, and can thus gain significant leverage in the negotiations and litigation surrounding the contract deposit dispute.

APPELLATE UPDATE

CPLR 5704 – A Tool to Obtain Appellate Relief Without Filing an Appeal

BY MAGDA L. CRUZ

There are occasions in civil litigation when a party requires urgent relief from a lower Court that either declines to issue a temporary restraining order ("TRO") pending a hearing on the principal motion, or grants a TRO, ex parte, that is, without notice to the opposing party. The affected party may be aggrieved significantly by the lower Court's cursory act, such as when the party is trying to stop on-going or imminent harm in a leasehold, or the sudden granting of a TRO without any opportunity to be heard interferes with the party's rights to enforce a judgment or imposes sudden obligations in a disputed matter. There is a procedural tool that the aggrieved party may deploy in order to have an appellate Court quickly review the lower Court's act, and possibly grant, or direct the lower Court to grant, the TRO, or to vacate the injury-causing TRO.

CPLR 5704 authorizes a justice of the Appellate Division or the Appellate Term to issue an ex parte order or provisional remedy that is refused by a lower Court from which an appeal to the respective appellate Court would lie, or to vacate or modify an ex parte order granted by such lower Court. This authority is typically utilized sparingly by appellate Courts and, based on their rules, almost always on notice to both sides, but in an appropriate case provides powerful relief, and many times, can be a game-changer.

Consider an instance where a tenant is committing a serious nuisance in an apartment and due to Court backlogs, the property owner is unable to obtain a Court hearing for many months. The property owner moves by order to show cause to obtain an expedited trial date, or alternatively, for an interim order to stop the most egregious of the nuisance behavior, but the Court declines to grant any interim relief, and sets a return date for the motion more than a month in the future.

Turning to the appellate Court in this instance under the authority of CPLR 5704 may enable the property owner to have the appellate Court directly order the lower Court to set an expedited date for the property owner's order to show cause, or to grant a TRO to abate the nuisance behavior, or both. No appeal need be filed by the property owner; it only needs to show that orders by the lower Court can be appealed to the specific appellate Court to which the property owner has turned for CPLR 5704 relief, and that the lower Court acted ex parte, not giving the property owner any opportunity to be heard on its emergency application.

Housing Court matters in Manhattan and the Bronx are appealable to the Appellate Term, First Department. Therefore, if the order to show cause was made in a Manhattan or Bronx Housing Court case, the CPLR 5704 motion must be made at the Appellate Term, First Department. If the case originated in the Supreme Court of those counties, then the CPLR 5704 motion would be made at the Appellate Division, First Department.

Another example where a CPLR 5704 motion may quickly return the parties to the status quo until a hearing on the disputed matter is conducted by the lower Court, is when a party obtains an ex parte TRO staying a proceeding from going forward, such as stopping discovery, precluding a summary judgment motion from being heard, or a trial from continuing. Such sudden interruptions cause delays and other strategic obstructions that can significantly prejudice the other party. Here again, CPLR 5704 can provide an opportunity to quickly put the matter before a justice of the appellate Court that hears appeals from the lower Court that issued the ex parte TRO. The appellate Court justice will review the ex parte TRO, and generally, after hearing from both sides, can vacate or modify the ex parte TRO, and allow the lower Court proceedings to resume.

Of course, the outcome of any CPLR 5704 motion is dependent upon the facts and legal issues underlying the motion. However, when faced with a situation involving urgent circumstances, or a material unhinging of the course of litigation, or infringement of substantial rights, the CPLR 5704 procedure should not be overlooked

Recent Notable Matters Handled by our Land Use/Zoning Team

Our team, led by partner Ron Mandel and associate Frank Noriega:

• Obtained approval for a zoning variance from the Board of Standards and Appeals to authorize a manufacturing use that is not permitted by right in the zoning district.

• Successfully assisted property owner and architect with "vesting" case to allow development to obtain certificate of occupancy issued pursuant to former zoning district regulations that changed in 2010.

• Obtained Zoning Resolution Determination from Department of Buildings to authorize construction of multi-family housing, which will result in substantially more units within the building than would otherwise be permitted.

• Counseled developer with street mapping issue involving Department of City Planning, Borough President's Office, and Department of Buildings to authorize construction of sewer line associated with the development of the building.

• Successfully lobbied Department of Buildings and obtained dismissal of decision previously issued by the Office of Administrative Trials and Hearings (OATH), and monetary penalties removed, related to a Privately Owned Public Space (POPS). A related POPS amendment for the property is being handled by the firm.

• Counseled client regarding Department of Transportation revocable consent process to authorize construction of development on City property.
